The other side of the Medal. We are the richest people in the world, and weighow righer every day. The revenue returns for the last quarter are eminently satisfactors Mr. Gladstone is at once like and unlike the old Jewish false prophets who prophesied only smooth things; for though he prophesies what is smooth. things: generally turn out even more emosth than his vatioinations promise. He took off five mil lions of taxation by his last budget, expecting that the ingressed consumption of the untaxed articles would restore a million and a quarter to the revenue. At this rate, during the last nine months the actual revenue would have been diminished by rather more than £2,800,000. But such has been our commercial prosperity that the revenue has lost only about £1,100,000 during where large ships out be at another. Rent modethese prosperous months. During the in t quarter | rate, the recovery of the actual returns has been even more striking. The increase in the consumption of tea has been very great. In 1864 we consumed above eighty-one million pounds, in 1865 above ninety-one millions. What a picture of would have we here! What gigantic products of the loom, the mine, and the forge. What vast fortunes reaped by merchants, manufacturers, and shipowners! What an amount of wages paid to mechanics and all sorts of employees ! Who can wonder at the splendours of Rotten Row, at the crowds that crush in the ante-chambers at a Royal leves or drawing room, at the auparh achemes of Lord Westminster for adding fresh splendours to his territory in Belgravia ? Happy are the people the sum total of whose wealth is so immense. Let us turn to the other side of the medal. On the day that these glowing statistics were published, a London incumbent published the story of one of his parishioners, which may be summed up in a very few words. Seven human beings, It contains a lot of Dining Rooms and Drawing the husband, his sick wife, their eldest daughter | (too ill to earn her brend), andfour little children. Offices. Stubles and Godowns. had been living for six whole weeks in one room, eight feet by ten feet in dimensions, without either hed or bed-clothes of any description. Their furniture had been seized for arrears of rent, which they could not pay, being obliged to find weekly instalments for dircharging a debt ral expenses of the husband's mother. who had died in the beginning of the year. This old woman had subscribed to three burial clubs. in order to pay for her own funeral, but they had all become bankrupt before she died. Set this story against the revenue returns of 1865. and draw the moral. Ninety million pounds of tea, on the one hand, consumed by those who could pay for it; six weeks of half-starvation pused through by seven people, without a parti-ele of bed or hedding, in a room about nine feet equare. Yet it was only at the end of the six weeks that they made application to bir. Martin, the clargyman who tells the tale. And this is only one case out of thousands. The feature of the bankruptcy of the three burial clobs ought to suggest to men and women of practical benevolence the importance of extending as far as possitle in London the Friendly Society system asranctioned by Aut of Parliament, in apposition to these ill-managed clubs which meet at public. Coolies Rooms, etc., also Stabling and Garden houses, and are bankrupt just when the sick and grounds situated next the residence of Captain the aged most need their help. The Trenty with Amtria. Austria appears to be suffering from the threes. of a great domestic struggle—the evidences of which are patent from the recent treaty which has i been contracted between that Empire and this country. It is a stop in the right direction, and will tend to remove political distrust and also commercial jealousy. More backward as regards population and resources than any other Europenn State, there is no greater field for wealth and prosperity than that which Austria presents. The treaty, just ratified, consists of twelve articles and a protocol. It stipulates that the subjects and commerce of Austria shall enjoy within the British dominions all advantages accorded to French subjects, and those of the Zallverein | G GRANITE GODOWNS on Marine Lot No States, under the different treaties concluded by | 4 745 at Wanchi having Water frontage and Great Britain with those Powers. Furthermore, it is stipulated that in 1874 this will be reduced to a mean rate of duty of not more than 15 per cent.
